Four weeks from now, the Empress will be on assignment overseas — okay, she assigned herself a week or so of leisure time — so there's no new contest this week. But in four weeks, we'll publish some more of the honorable mentions from Week 1062: current-events poems that shouldn't be outdated a month from now.

Meanwhile, next week's print-edition readers will find The Style Invitational in a new location in the Sunday Post: The Arts and Sunday Style sections have decided to move in together — move back in together, really — into a single broadsheet (full-size) section called Arts & Style: Just as in the weekday paper, classical arts, popular arts and various featurey columns will once again be in one trip-to-the-bathroom-friendly section — call it same-section marriage. And the Invite will be inside the section, at the top of the page right next to the crossword.

Be sure to track us down, because we'll be celebrating our new digs with the contest everyone loves to enter: our 20th annual challenge to "breed" two horses in a list of some of this year's Triple Crown-nominated racehorses, and name their "foal." The new contest and list of horses will appear online in which we asked for rhyming poems based on current events. The deadline for submissions was March 10, and although there was still a lot of confusion about what was going on in Ukraine, a slew of entrants wrote a verse or title including “Crimea River.”

Our time stuck in traffic decreased this past year!
For what should we give a collective big cheer?
For smart growth and transit and doing things right?

And cash sequestration cost thousands of jobs.

To the tune of “America the Beautiful”

“America the Beautiful”:
When we hear that song sung
By anyone who’s dark or gay.
or speaks a foreign tongue,
Our patriotic hearts are filled
with somber waves of hate,
For xenophobic loathing is what makes our country great.

We love to watch the Super Bowl,
and we love every ad.

But this year there was one for Coke that made us super mad.

America, America!

Fox shed its rage on thee.

Fill spacious skies with angry cries against diversity.

(Chris O'Carroll, Emporia, Kan.)
